Jazz, Brokensha are

By KARL MANTYLA

DETROIT (AP) - Little Jack Brokensha, a tiny musician who joined the giants of jazz, says the "cycle is turn-ing" and a new wave of popularity is in store for jazz.

The 5-foot- $2\frac{1}{2}$  inch founder of the Australian Jazz Quintet hears a resurgent of America's only native, musical art form sounding from the psychedelic wailing or rock-and-roll, teen age

"Some of the younger rock groups are getting very jazz oriented. They are improvising, they're searching," says Brokensha, a native of Adelaide, Australia, who ranks as one only a dozen premier vibraphone players in the United States.

The 43-year-old percussionist often sets up his vibraphone in "pop" studios, such as Motown in Detroit, to hammer out heavy beat background music for re cordings of teen-age stars such as The Supremes.

But Brokensha, who shops in boys departments to find the "mod" clothes he wears, keeps in the mainstream of improvised music by playing with his Concert Jazz Quartet at a night club he bought as a haven for jazz in midtown Detroit.

This coming June 19-22, Brokensha will join singer Ella Fitzgerald, guitarist Kenny Burrel, pianist Les McCann and electric saxophonist Eddie Harris at what he calls, in a clipped semi-British accent, the "veddy, veddy way-out" Montreux Jazz Festival in Montreux, Switzerland.

Brokensha says "a natural evolution" toward jazz lies within teen-agers' music.

"You see, you've got to realize that most people start in rock by knowing, like, three changes of key.

"They play the blues badly and they have a heavy back beat, and that's as much as they know, a couple of keys. Any thinking person, if he's going to be involved, will sooner or later start to investigate his craft. The more he investigates it, the more he's going to come over to the thinking of jazz musician.

Ky. rich in lore

"You don't see jam sessions," Brokensha who once was billed as the "Boy Won-der of the Xylophone" on vaudeville at age 6. "They're not inventive people-except within their own set of standards. But it's heading in that direction.'

Brokensha and his quintet were swept to a height of jazz popularity in the 1950s.

Their first concert—"we were booked sight unseen"was in Washington, D.C., playing alongside Miles Davis, George Shearing, the Modern Jazz Quartet, Jerry Mulligan and Dave Brubeck.

Brokensha, who weighs "110 pounds soaking wet," says he made the 12,000-mile journey from Australia in 1953 intending to work for two years in the United States.

"I had no intention of staying," he said. "But on the strength of two tape recordings, we got a five-year contract out of Joe Glazier and the Associated Booking Corp. in New York. We could have been a bunch of kangaroos for all they knew."

He signed a contract with Bethlehem Records.

"And, golly, it was just circumstances—the next thing we knew we were doing all those Birdlands and the Basin Streets and the Carnegie Halls and Newport and the concert tours," he says.

The Australian Jazz Quintet ended abruptly in 1959 beas Brokensha cause, laughingly remarks, "sex reared its ugly head. We contracted in 1959 to tour Australia for three months. Three of the members of the group got married out there."

The unique sound of his Australian Jazz Quintet came from Brokensha on vibes; Erroll Buddle on bassoon; Dick Healy on flute and alto sax; Bryce Rhode at the piano, and Ed Gaston on bass. Healy, Rhode and Gaston married Australian girls and staved.

Brokensha in 1959 returned alone to the United States from the land where, at age 14, he was percussionist with the South Australian Symphony Orchestra, playing under conductors such as Antal Dorati, Sir Thomas Beecham, Eugene Ormandy and Sir Malcolm Sargent.

He decided to settle in Detroit with his petite, blonde wife, Shirley, now 36, and the first of his two daughters, because "I discovered the brash world of industrial music," which paid handcomely for music in commercials extolling the products of Chrysler, General Motors and others.

He formed a new quartet, with pianist Bess Bonnier as the key instrumentalist besides himself, and continued playing clubs, small concerts and television shows until, in 1966, he opened up his own nightclub, called Brokensha's, in midtown Detroit.

Now, Brokensha says in his Aussie-British accent; "In the course of the day I play some pretty funny music to make a beanie (dollar).

"But at night I can play what I want."

Among the eager nominees for drama's Tony Awards are John Cunningham and Lorraine Serabian from "Zorba," James Earl Jones and Jane Alexander from "The Great White Hope" and Maria Karnilova from "Zorba." The Awards will be colorcast at 10 p.m. Sunday on channel 4.

New York is for the birds And the birdwatchers, too

NEW YORK (AP) — Not many New Yorkers realize it, but one of the best hunting grounds on the Eastern seabard lies right in the heart of Manhattan.

Central Park, hedged in by skyscrapers and stores, mansions and slums, hotels and roaring traffic, has an irresistable attraction e a c h spring for migrating birds. And there they are hunted down inexorably by as eager a lot of bird men as you ever saw.

About 250 species have been counted in the park at one time or another, and as many as a hundred have been observed there in a single day.

cloudy May morning when the warblers are in full flight and when good flying conditions existed the night before south of the city. Then it is that flocks winging in over the sea or over industrialized New Jersey find the park a sylvan haven. Twenty or thirty thousand birds may swarm in on such an occasion. That's in spite of the ardent bird watchers, the usual strolters, and certain odd ball types of humanity.

Hundreds of bird people, binoculars at the ready and bird guides in pocket, trod the paths and crash through underbrush in the Ramble, a woodsy area near the American Museum of Natural History. By their very presence they drive out sleezy individuals who also find that grove attractive. Later in the summer, when the bird watchers have retired because nothing much is left but starlings, pigeons and English sparrows, the odd balls return.

Many of the bird watchers just drop around during lunch hour or before work or on a day of. But some are led by professionals like Farida Wiley of the American museum. Neophytes in tow, she has ben prowling the park for 20 years or more. A frail looking teacher type, she can walk the legs off many a strong man. A true blue bird watcher like Miss Wiley feels no need to explain this spring madness, but she does express her misgivings. Too many people and too much pesticide, she feels, are threatening the park's bird

The birds themselves seem harried by all this attention and noise. But for the most part they hang around until dusk before starting on another leg of their journey.

Then the bird watchers leave also and the Ramble falls silent under its baleful electric lights, largely deserted except for a policeman on duty or an unidentifiable pedestrian. Few New Yorkers frequent the more remote areas of the park at night.

Television cashes in on Big documentary appeal

By CECIL SMITH

HOLLYWOOD — Time was when you labeled a program a documentary you automatically had a loser. Television's so-called "realities" were the bones tossed to the FCC by broadcasters as proof they were living up to their license requirement to operate in the public interest. But it was unthinkable the public would be much interested in them.

That's changed — and drastically. Particularly this season. Some of the most popular programs of the year are nonfiction — notably, "The Lions Are Free," the National Geographic studies and the Jacques-Yves Costeau explorations under the sea.

This is not at all surprising to Irwin Rosten and Nick Noxon, one of the finest young teams of documentary makers.

"Nonfiction books are bestsellers," said Rosten. "Nonfiction magazines are the most popular we have. It was simply a question of television catching up with the public."

"But television had to learn," said Noxon, "that you can make documentaries that are not dull, that fact can be as entertaining as fiction. and still be honest to the fact."

Rosten and Noxon trace the newfound popularity of the documentary from Walt Disney's nature films, "The Living Desert," "Beaver Valley" and such to the work of David Wolper, who became the nation's largest independent producer of documentaries before combining with Metromedia Productions last Wolper began when no network would run an independently made documentary. He simply had to produce a better product than the shows out of network shops to break the ban. He produced both studies of "The Making of a President" and launched the National Geographic and Costeau series (now produced by Metromedia) which an independent producer could function.

Rosten and Noxon came out of Wolper's organization. Irwin wrote and produced the first Costeau special and a number of the National Geographic studies, including the much acclaimed "Grizzly." Nick wrote and produced several Geographic programs, including "Dr. Leakey and the Dawn of Man."

The two left Wolper to go on their own and last year formed a documentary division of MGM studios, which they head — fact is, they are MGM's documentary division.

They immediately latched onto a prize project — to produce documentaries from Time-Life books, notably the Life Nature Library. The first of these will be on CBS next season — Rosten's "The Wolf Men" and Noxon's "The Man Hunters." The two develop a project together and then work separately in production.

Irwin is a slender, bearded veteran of TV news rooms; Nick is a cherubic young man out of industrial and educational films. Though Irwin's project is a study of the vanishing timber wolf and Nick's deals with the search for the earliest traces of man, they feel the projects dovetail into each other.

"Strange about the wolf," said Rosten. "It's the most remarkable of all animals, and yet throughout legend it is a symbol of fear — the werewolf, 'Red Riding Hood and the Wolf,' 'Peter and the Wolf' and so on.

"The wolf is vanishing from the earth, but there's still a bounty on wolves in Alaska. Yet the wolf is a highly intelligent creature, a social animal like man, a predator like man who creates and lives in a very stable society. A wolf pack lives much as we think early man lived, which ties into Nick's show. We believe any documentary must have relevance to modern man — which is all the more reason to study a wolf pack."

Animal shows have been the most popular of documentaries, and Rosten says: "We're running out of animals." Of much less weight on the rating charts are studies that deal with contemporary man, such as the recent ecological work, "Three Young Americans in Search of Survival," and NBC's superb White Papers on the "Ordeal of the American City." The third of the White Paper series, "Conthe circumstances surrounding the San Francisco State turmoil as a microcosm of urban revolt, will be offered Tuesday night.

The play is still the thing To Met's Dorothy Kirsten

By JACK BROCKMAN

SEATTLE (AP) — When Dorothy Kirsten says, ''I never wanted to sing," the immediate tendency is to tug nervously at the inside of one's coll, then cough politely.

How can one take seriously such a statement from the blonde beauty whose voice has thrilled millions—in dozens of countries—and who in December will celebrate her 25th anniversary as a Metropolitan Opera soprano?

When, however, she continues with, "I wanted to become an actress," the message comes clearer.

"I wanted to become an actress—a very great actress.

"I wanted to perform. I still do. I love those people out in front.

"When I was a little girl—mean really little—I ran away to join a circus. My father found me in a practice ring, bareback—standing up— with one of those girdle arrangements to keep me from falling

"I guess I'm still a little girl," Miss Kirsten said in an interview between appearances for the Seattle Opera Association here. She has been a frequent soloist here over the years.

"I've used my voice to achieve my acting dreams. I don't sing in the bathtub or the shower; I don't whistle while I work—I can't whistle very well. I only use my voice to perform —or to prepare for performing.

"My joy isn't singing—it's performing."

Born in Montclair, N.J., in 1917, Miss Kirsten had music in her blood. Her great-aunt, Catherine Hayes, was called the "Irish Jenny Lind" and sang opera in London, Vienna and Rome. Her grandfather, James J. Beggs, was conductor of the world-famous Buffalo Bill's band and a founder of the musicians' union.

When Miss Kirsten was 22, she came to the notice of the great soprano Grace Moore, who became her patroness and at one point sent her to study in Italy with famed tenor Beniamino Gigli's teacher.

Two years later she made her operatic debut in Chicago. In 1944 she was signed for the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

"I never auditioned for the Met.

"I'm very proud of that. I was hired as a prima donna," she says.

Her rise, first to Chicago, then the Met, was described as "meteoric," but Miss Kirsten disputes that phrasing.

"What I was then—as what I am now—is all a matter of pace.

"I set out with the Met as a goal—the most fantastic opera house in the world—the greatest —the best—the top—the very pennacle. But I never forced myself to it.

"By the time I reached the Met, I had sung in more than 500 operetta performances, on the stage, and as a guest artist on radio programs of the late 30s and early 40s.

"I only took on challenges that were realistic. As a young singer, I refused to be pushed into singing roles more dramatic than my voice could handle.

"When I reached the Met," I was ready for the Met," she says.

"I am impetuous in everything else in life, but for my career I studied carefully and made haste slowly," she once told a reporter in Los Angeles, where she lives with her husband, neuro-surgeon Dr. John Douglas French, head of the Brain Research Institute there.

The pacing now pervades her private life. She golfs 18 holes nearly everyday, playing to a 19 handicap "of which I am very proud."

She picks her roles and appearances carefully, to leave more and more time for life as a doctor's wife—as well as continuing to pace her career.

She wants to paint—with oils —to decorate ("I've just received my license as an interior decorator in Los Angeles")— and do "so many, many other things.

"I don't want to sing—I want to act. I want to please audiences. I want to be Desdemona. I want to feel the part and bring it to the audience."

For Dorothy Kirsten, the music is the means but "the play's the thing."

Books go modern

NEW YORK (AP) - Electronics and the printed word have joined forces to provide the first custom-made books in educational publishing.

Schoolteachers now can assemble their own choices of historic materials, combined in any order and have a workable class text within three months.

This is made possible by an RCA videocomp typesetter that electronically sets pages, complete with headlines, subheads, footnotes, folio numbers and even rules, for the Encyclopedia Britannica's Annals of America at an average rate of 25 seconds per page. Electronic type composition permits teachers to select any particular fact or facet —even a single paragraph— from the more than 2,200 articles in the Annals for inclusion in a special text.
